

10:20 A.M. - October 7, 1926

I called on Golden Treadwell, a porter on the D.L.& W.R.R., now located at Bloomfield Station. On August 1, 1924 he was located at the East Orange station of this road.

I showed him a picture of Dickman and asked him if this looked like the man who escaped after Manyon was shot. He said he thought it was the party but could not say positively (but could identify him by size if he saw him), as he had his cap pulled down over his eyes, with the peak released from the top part of the cap. Again he stated he believed this to be the party, but he could not be sure.

I then went to East Orange and had a talk with E.L. Stack, post office clerk, this being my second visit to see him. I gave him a picture of Dickman and, after looking the same over carefully, he thought probably this might be the man, and would do all in his power to identify him as such. He gave a description again as being about 5'7", rather heavy set and a hard face. This would resemble Dickman.

As my report of October 6th stated, the Postal Inspectors intend taking Stack over to where Dickman is confined at the Army base the first part of next week. I believe that Stack will do all in his power to help identify Dickman as the partner of the deceased Manyon. Lannigan is his proper name and he is a brother of "Death House" Manyon, who is now in Trenton prison.
